Explore your options.

Penn State is all about choices—especially the choice of where to study. With twenty undergraduate campuses, you can study at our University Park campus located in the center of the state with more than 46,000 students, or at one of our smaller campuses located in rural settings, suburban areas, or near large cities such as Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. The choice is yours.

Most international students start and finish their degree at the University Park campus, but many students begin their Penn State career at a different campus. And, since each of our undergraduate campuses offer four-year programs, you can choose to stay at your starting campus to complete your degree, or you can finish your degree at a different campus with the 2+2 plan.

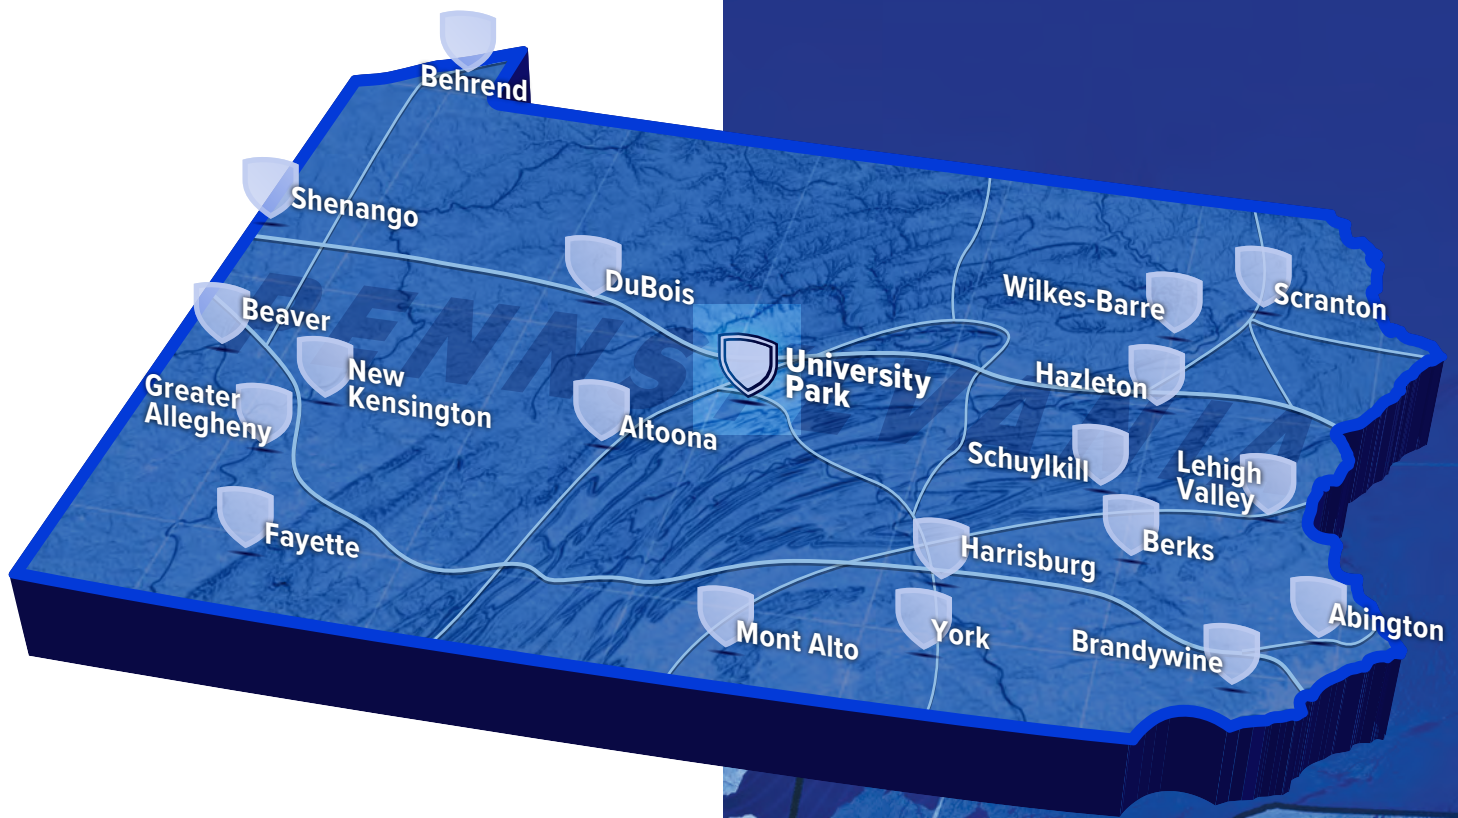

The 2+2 plan allows you to spend your first two years at your admitted campus, and then transition to your final campus location, typically the University Park campus to complete your degree. In fact, with roughly half of our students starting their studies at Penn State through the 2+2 plan, it is the most common path to a Penn State degree.

There are many benefits to the 2+2 plan—including cost savings, smaller class sizes, and living in or near communities that most interest you. Most importantly, regardless of your campus of study, you will be earning a world-class degree and graduating with a diploma from Penn State.

A vibrant community, close to it all.

Penn State is in Pennsylvania, on the east coast of the United States. With campuses located throughout the state you can choose the campus environment that is right for you.

University Park, Penn State's largest campus, is situated in the heart of central Pennsylvania, adjacent to the town of State College. This modern university town—with a population of about 164,000—boasts a bustling downtown full of restaurants, shops, art galleries, concert venues, and hosts numerous events throughout the year for students and residents alike to enjoy.

No matter which campus you choose, you'll have easy access to many major cities and airports in metropolitan areas such as New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Washington, D.C. Additionally, there are several regional airports in nearby areas including State College, Harrisburg, and Erie that offer connecting flights to international airports.
