EPP is an undergraduate major in the Department of Education Policy Studies for students who are interested in an education/policy related occupation but not necessarily teaching or administration jobs.

Our degree programs include ...

- Education and Public Policy Bachelor of Science (B.S)
- Graduate degrees in Educational Leadership, Educational Theory and Policy, Higher Education, and Comparative and International Education (dual degree)

About our undergraduate programs ...

- We provide a lot of flexibility in curriculum, allowing students to pursue interdisciplinary interests.
- We offer many opportunities to engage with faculty.
- Our department is populated with discipline-based scholars who study the organization of education in the U.S. and/or internationally.
- Students are encouraged to use the major’s flexibility to create a coursework concentration built on their interests.
- EPP’s student organization, Students Together in Educational Policy (STEP) provides support to EPP majors in their academic and professional endeavors.
- Students have the opportunity to live with other first-year students studying within the College of Education through the Special Living Options offered by the Housing Office.
- Students complete a supervised internship to gain work-related experience that helps focus their career goals and builds professional networks.
- EPP offers a study abroad opportunity in Eastern Europe. Students also are encouraged to explore study abroad opportunities from other departments.
